San Diego was graced with royalty Friday night when Prince Harry of Wales, having arrived in California Thursday to undergo helicopter training, was spotted downtown at Andaz San Diego. Enjoying his first night out on the town since his arrival, Prince Harry and 20 of his friends headed up to the hotel's Ivy Rooftop to let loose for the weekend.

Comfortably set up at the far west end of the expansive rooftop, they ordered Absolut Vodka, Red Bull and beer, and enjoyed the views of downtown San Diego. By midnight, they moved to the rooftop's pool deck and from a private cabana, watched the rugby match and celebrated until the early hours of the morning.

According to a girl who SAYS she partied with Harry and his boys, after the club closed at 3am Harry and his crew stripped down to their underwear and jumped into the pool! Witnesses say Harry and his friends didn't appear to be too drunk, they were just having a fun boys night out.

Stationed in El Centro, Prince Harry will remain in California for two months to refine his skills on the Apache attack helicopter, preparing himself to possibly return to the fight in Afghanistan. Despite his evening out at Andaz San Diego, reportedly he won't have much time for extracurricular activities, as he plans to devote his time to military training.

Earlier that night, Prince Harry and his friends went to McP's Irish Pub and Grill in Coronado! "He said, 'I'm glad to be here,'" says Ted Taylor, bar manager for McP's Irish Pub and Grill in Coronado, Calif., "He sat outside at a picnic table and ate a burger and beer." "He was very personable. He was a nice guy, very low-key," says Taylor. "A couple of girls wanted to take pictures but they said no." (One patron Tweeted that he did have his photo taken with the Prince, however.)

Prince Harry, 27, and seven buddies stayed at the bar for more than an hour before heading out. The watering hole is popular among those training at the naval air field, since it's named for bar owner Greg McPartlin, who was a Navy Seal from 1969 to 1972.
